

Adam Lane aka NONFICTION – Rapper, Singer, Songwriter

Adam Lane (born September 11, 1991), known as NonFiction, is a Canadian rapper, singer, songwriter and record producer. Growing up in Hamilton, Ontario, NonFiction had his first introduction to music through his family's church. Being devout Christians, NonFiction and his family would attend church a couple times a week where he would nurture and grow his love for music. That love for music eventually spilled over into school becoming an invaluable member of the school choir where he eventually was recognized for his outstanding solo performances in the local media. It was at this point NonFiction knew that he would be making and performing music for the rest of his life.

As a growing and impressionable youth, NonFiction found himself drawn to genres such as Hip Hop and R&B, initially following artists such as 50 cent, Eminem, Ludacris, Jay Z, Kanye West, Ne-Yo, Usher, Chris Brown and Drake. A combination of these artists would eventually be what is responsible for forming his unique Hip/Hop meets alternative R&B style.

Times became tough for NonFiction throughout his teenage years, leaving home at a young age and eventually troubles with the law. With his life appearing to be on a downward spiral, NonFiction joined the Canadian Navy. After a summer of basic training he was inspired to make a fresh start. NonFiction returned to his home town and purchased recording equipment from which he would go on to record and release multiple mixtapes.

A brief partnership with an independent record label was where he would hone his recording, mixing and mastering skills. He would work countless hours shadowing the sound engineer absorbing as much knowledge as possible. After a falling out, NonFiction would return to his roots, record and release a few more mixtapes.

Today, NonFiction has partnered with From the Dust Productions Inc., a Toronto based independent record label and is looking forward to creating, recording and distributing his music world-wide.
